

Alejandro Martín-Hobdey is Scientific Officer at the “New and Emerging Science and Technology” (NEST) activity in the Research DG of the European Commission, where he is in charge of the overall coordination of the focussed PATHFINDER activities, and in particular the initiative on “Tackling Complexity in Science”. He has a PhD. in physics from the University of Rochester (USA) and has worked in optical and medical physics at MIT, Harvard University and the Consejo Superior de Investigaciones Científicas (CSIC). He joined the European Commission in 1994, where he has worked in a variety of research programmes, including Materials and Energy Research.